The stock market was really booming after World War I. People were happy that the world's first great war was over and started investing a lot of money. However, people started to spend money they didn't have. This caused a lot of panic, and the stock market crashed. This is known as Black Tuesday. The stock market's value dropped too much, and many people _____ all of their money. As a result, the Great Depression of the 1930s began. This is an example of what can happen when people buy stocks without being careful. Since the stock market had been going up for so many years, people in the 1920s bought a lot of stock with borrowed money. When stock prices decreased, they could not repay the money they owed.
